bring, take, fetch and get

The four verbs bring, take, fetch and get are all used in a similar manner to mean moving an object from one place to another.

However, there are key differences to the use of each verb that depend on where the speaker stands in relation to the objects.

Bring Take Fetch/Get

The choice between bring or take depends on the location of the speakers.

If Susan is speaking to Jim she refers to something that is with her, she uses bring.

Generally, use bring when something moves from here to where the person you are speaking to is and vice versa.

If Susan refers to something that is at a different location, she uses take. Generally, use take when something moves from Susan to a location different from where Jim is.

Peter lent me a great CD. I'll bring you the CD when I come tonight.

You can bring it back to my house on Saturday and I'll take it to Peter's house or you can take it to his house when you go tomorrow if you've finished listening to it.

Fetch/Get

When speaking about going somewhere and getting something and then bringing it back, use get (American English) or fetch (British English).
